

DIOCESAN PRESS SERVICE

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

EPISCOPAL CHURCH CENTER • 815 SECOND AVENUE • NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10017

ter H. Boyd, Press Officer

a. Drew Dearnaley, Assistant Press Officer

Telephone: (212) 867-8400

81088

March 12, 1981

PICTURE CAPTIONS

Books on Christian Education and Land Use

81088/1 A new book by the Christian education staff at the Episcopal Church Center, and regional coordinators has been published by The Seabury Press this spring. Making Sense of Things: Towards a Theology of Homegrown Christian Education is a collection of practical and theological essays by leaders in local and regional education experience. Edited by the Rev. David W. Perry of the Church Center staff, the book presents a number of practical discussions on such themes as 'Toward Relationship with God,' 'Education of the Easter People,' 'Daring to Learn,' 'Transformation and Growth,' and 'Between Fact and the Christ Event in Life.' Perry is co-editor of the education journal AWARE and editor of the 1979 book, Homegrown Christian Education. A paper edition ($5.95) is available from Seabury Book Service, Seabury Service Center, Somers, Conn. 06071.

81088/2 A new discussion guide and resource book for adult groups seeking to understand the ethics of land use in a Christian context has been published by The Seabury Press. The 160-page book, Let the Earth Bless the Lord: A Christian Perspective on Land Use, is edited by the Revs. Charles A. Cesaretti, public issues officer at the Episcopal Church Center, and Stephen Commins of Los Angeles. The enormous increase in population on the earth and the challenges of modern technology have raised serious questions about the use of land. This book seeks to raise the moral and religious consciousness of the Church and individuals to cope with the problems of land use. Cesaretti is the editor of a book in the same tradition -- The Prometheus Question -- published in 1980, which is a study guide on energy. A paperback edition ($5.95) is available from Seabury Book Service, Seabury Service Center, Somers, Conn. 06071.

#####

DP, DX

